Understanding Blend and Burnish Gradations

Blend Gradations: Blend gradations involve gradually shifting one color into another, creating seamless transitions without visible lines or edges. This technique is particularly effective for creating natural-looking shadows, highlights, and color variations in hair, skin, and clothing.

Burnish Gradations: Burnish gradations, on the other hand, involve darkening and enriching a specific area of a color by mixing it with a darker shade. This technique is used to add depth, emphasize contours, and create a sense of volume and texture in various elements of a painting.
