- I love you, but I don't think we're write for each other anymore.

While these autocorrected mishaps may have unintentionally added a touch of humor to an otherwise difficult conversation, it's important to remember that the consequences of a breakup can be serious.

If you're considering breaking up with someone, it's always best to do it in person and with respect. While texting can be a way to communicate your decision, it's not the most appropriate method for such an important conversation.

However, if you find yourself in a situation where autocorrect has led to a hilarious breakup mishap, don't be afraid to laugh it off. After all, it's just a phone and mistakes happen.

And if your ex is also able to find the humor in the situation, maybe you can even end on a positive note.
