The River of Silver is a classic account of a journey through the Grand Canyon. Written by John Wesley Powell, the first person to successfully navigate the Colorado River through the canyon, the book is a fascinating and inspiring account of exploration and adventure.

Powell's expedition set out from Green River, Wyoming, in May 1869. The party traveled in four wooden boats, and they faced numerous challenges along the way. They had to navigate through whitewater rapids, climb over waterfalls, and portage their boats around impassable obstacles. They also had to contend with hostile Native American tribes.

Despite the challenges, Powell and his men persevered, and they eventually reached the mouth of the Grand Canyon in August 1869. They were the first people to successfully navigate the Colorado River through the canyon, and their journey is still considered one of the greatest feats of exploration in American history.
