Selecting Breeding Stock

The first step in raising Duroc pigs is selecting the right breeding stock. When choosing breeding stock, it is important to consider the following factors:

- Lineage: The lineage of the pigs you choose will have a significant impact on the quality of your pigs. Choose pigs from a reputable breeder who can provide you with information about the pigs' lineage.
- Health: The health of the pigs you choose is also important. Choose pigs that are free of disease and have a good overall health history.
- Temperament: The temperament of the pigs you choose is also important. Choose pigs that are docile and easy to handle.

Breeding

Once you have selected your breeding stock, you will need to breed them. The breeding process for Duroc pigs is relatively simple. The first step is to introduce the boar to the sow. The boar will typically mount the sow and mate with her. The sow will typically give birth to a litter of 8-12 piglets after a gestation period of about 115 days.

Care and Management

Once your pigs have been born, you will need to provide them with proper care and management. This includes providing them with a clean and comfortable environment, as well as a nutritious diet. You will also need to vaccinate your pigs and deworm them regularly.

Housing

Pigs need a clean and comfortable environment to live in. The ideal housing for pigs is a barn or shed that is well-ventilated and has plenty of space for the pigs to move around. The barn or shed should also be protected from the elements.

Feeding

Pigs are omnivores and will eat a variety of foods. However, the most important part of their diet is a high-quality commercial feed. Commercial feed is formulated to provide pigs with the nutrients they need to grow and develop properly.

Health Care

Pigs are susceptible to a variety of diseases and parasites. It is important to vaccinate your pigs and deworm them regularly to protect them from these diseases. You should also monitor your pigs for any signs of illness and consult with a veterinarian if you have any concerns.

Raising

Pigs are typically raised for about 6 months before they are ready to be slaughtered. During this time, you will need to provide them with proper care and management. This includes providing them with a nutritious diet, a clean and comfortable environment, and regular veterinary care.

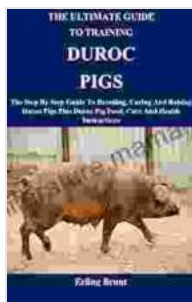

Marketing

Once your pigs are ready to be slaughtered, you will need to market them. There are a variety of ways to market pigs, including selling them to a local butcher, selling them to a packing plant, or selling them directly to consumers.

Raising Duroc pigs can be a profitable and rewarding experience. However, it is important to understand the basics of their care and management before you get started. By following the tips in this guide, you can help ensure that your pigs are healthy and productive.
